(b) Paragraph on :-

Addiction of Social Media :-

Social Media addiction has emerged as a pervasive and insidious issue in today's digital landscape. The constant stream of notifications, likes, and comments can activate the brain's rewards system, releasing feel-good chemicals such as dopamine, which can lead to compulsive behaviours. As a result, many individuals find themselves mindlessly scrolling through their feeds for hours.

This addiction can have far-reaching consequences affecting not only the individual but also their relationships, work and overall well-being.

Excessive social media use has been linked to decreased attention span, increased stress and anxiety and a decline in face-to-face communication skills.

Furthermore, social media platforms are designed to be highly engaging and addictive, using algorithms that prioritize content that is likely to generate the most interactions.

It's essential to recognize the signs of social media addiction and take steps to maintain a healthy balance between online and offline life.

This can create a vicious cycle, where users feel compelled to constantly check their accounts.
